Subject: grievance: Gross Electric Vs. John Mosher and IBEW 236

Background

On October 20, 2016, John Mosher, President of IBEW, Local Union No. 236, was referred to Gross Electric, Inc. to work as a Journeyman Wireman Electrician at the Lafarge Cement Plant project. After Mr. Mosher was referred to Gross Electric for work at the Lafarge Cement Plant project, Gross Electric exercised their "right to reject any applicant for employment" as stated in Article IV, Section 4.03* of the Collective Bargaining Agreement between IBEW, Local Union No. 236 and the Albany Electrical Contractors Association.

On November 4, 2016, Mr. Mosher filed an unfair labor practice charge against Gross Electric, Inc. at the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). The unfair labor practice charge stemmed from a recording of Gross Electric's Supervisors stating that Mr. Gross would never hire Mr. Mosher based on his actions at a grievance hearing while engaged in union activity, fulfilling his duties as President of the Union.

**Art. IV, Sect. 4.03 – The Employer shall have the right to reject any applicant for employment.*

Issue

On June 19, 2017, Joseph Gross of Gross Electric, Inc. filed a grievance against John Mosher and IBEW, Local Union No. 236 alleging a violation of Article I, Sections 1.06* and 1.07**, seeking a monetary award of $78,657.15 to pay for his legal fees and the time spent defending the NLRB charge. A grievance hearing was held on June 22, 2017, to address the grievance filed by Joseph Gross. After significant discussion, the committee voted and deadlocked on the charge that there was a violation of Article I, Sections 1.06 and 1.07.

**Art. I, Sect. 1.06 – All grievances or questions in dispute shall be adjusted by the duly authorized representative of each of the parties to this Agreement. In the event that these two are unable to adjust any matter within 48 hours, they shall refer the same to the Labor-Management Committee.*

\*Art. I, Sect. 1.07 – All matters coming before the Labor-Management Committee shall be decided by majority vote. Four (4) members of the Committee, two (2) from each of the parties hereto, shall be a quorum for the transaction of business, but each party shall have the right to cast the full vote of its membership and it shall be counted as though all were present and voting. In absence of a deadlock, the Labor-Management Committee's decision shall be final and binding.*

Union's Requested Settlement

IBEW, Local Union No. 236 is asking Council to determine whether or not there was a violation of Article I, Sections 1.06 and 1.07 of the CBA. If Council determines that there is no violation of the CBA the Union asks Council to deny the grievance filed by Joseph Gross.

The Union feels that since Gross Electric, Inc. was exercising their "right to reject any applicant for employment" as stated in Article IV, Section 4.03 of the CBA, when they rejected Mr. Mosher, that there was no violation of the CBA, therefore, no grievance was filed on behalf of Mr. Mosher and there was no violation of Article I, Sections 1.06 and 1.07.

Gross v Mosher and IBEW Local 236

Background

On November 4, 2016 John Mosher, President of IBEW Local 236 (Mosher) filed an unfair labor practice charge under the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) against Gross Electric based on the multiple rejections of his referrals for work at the Lafarge Cement Plant.

Mosher claimed in his charge under the NLRA that the rejection of his referrals was due to antiunion animus resulting from his engaging in union activity at a grievance hearing September 27, 2016 where Gross Electric was the respondent.

The September 27th grievance hearing dealt with the rejection of a referral under Section 4.03 of the Inside Agreement. At the hearing and in the presence of Joseph Gross (Gross), Mosher made critical comments regarding Gross' hiring practices, as well as disparaging remarks about Gross' general foremen and supervisors, one of whom was the general foreman at the Lafarge job site.

Gross Electric responded to the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) complaint, rejected a settlement offer from the NLRB general counsel of two weeks pay and benefits, fought the complaint and prevailed when the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) dismissed the complaint on May 22, 2017. The ALJ's decision is currently under appeal.

Following the decision dismissing the complaint, Gross filed a grievance against Mosher and Local 236 for failure to use the collectively bargained grievance process in Article I of the Inside Agreement. (Appendix 1)

After more than two hours of discussion surrounding the issue at the grievance hearing and the interim meeting prior to arbitration in front of the Council, the Labor Management Committee remains deadlocked. (Appendix 2)

Issues to be resolved

Was Mosher required to use the grievance process set forth in the collective bargaining agreement prior to filing a charge against Gross Electric under the NLRA? And if so, is the remedy proposed by Gross appropriate?

The contract Language at issue, Article I Section 1.06 reads as follows:

“All grievances or questions in dispute shall be adjusted by the duly authorized representative of each of the parties to this Agreement. In the event that these two are unable to adjust any matter within 48 hours, they shall refer the same to the Labor-Management Committee.”

Facts

- Mosher was informed by Local 236 and he agreed that they did not believe there was a violation of Article IV, Section 4.03 of the collective bargaining agreement.
- The Local unilaterally concluded that the grievance process under the collective bargaining agreement did not apply.
- The NLRB ALJ in his decision to dismiss the complaint wrote “...that Gross refused to hire Mosher for Lafarge because he took offense at Mosher’s criticisms of him, his policies under the contract that the Union has not contested, and Warnings, and not because of antiunion animus.” (Appendix 3, page 9)
- The legal fees to defend the NLRA charge filed by Mosher amounted to $31,000.

Grievant's Position

On the issue of requiring the use of the collectively bargained grievance process in the Inside Agreement; Gross Electric and the Albany Chapter of NECA contend that the basis of Mosher's complaint to the NLRB was a rejected referral under Article IV, Section 4.03 of the agreement, and as such was subject to the grievance process in the agreement.

Language contained in the Basic Principles of the agreement stating "All will benefit by continuous peace and by adjusting any differences by rational, common sense methods." and a grievance process that is clearly delineated in Article I of the agreement, establish the expectation that disputes arising from an employer exercising his or her rights under the agreement should first be adjudicated using the grievance process within the agreement.

The Local and Mosher unilaterally determined that there was no valid grievance or dispute and therefore no reason to use the grievance process. While this may be a matter of convenience for the Labor Management Committee, the language is clear in Article I, Section 1.0 that all grievances and disputes shall be adjusted by the parties to the agreement.

Section 1.06 All grievances or questions in dispute shall be adjusted by the duly authorized representative of each of the parties to this Agreement. [Emphasis Added] In the event that these two are unable to adjust any matter within 48 hours, they shall refer the same to the Labor-Management Committee.

This requirement is especially important if it is likely that the dispute will be taken up in another forum such as with the NLRB.

Had a hearing been held, there would have been a decision from the grievance process that would have become a part of the investigative record used by the NLRB General Council to determine the merits of the charge. This may have led to a refusal to issue the complaint or a recommendation by the General Council to withdraw the complaint.

Employers who are signatories to the Inside Agreement understand that language in the agreement, including the unfettered right to reject referrals under Section 4.03, does not insulate them from liability they may have for engaging in unlawful discrimination. However, abiding by the grievance process would not have precluded Mosher from filing his charges under the NLRA or impaired his ability to meet the statute of limitations under the NLRA for filing a charge.

It should be noted that Mosher could have withdrawn his charge at any time prior to the ALJ decision and then reinstated it following the completion of the grievance process.

Gross Electric and the Albany Chapter of NECA believe that Mosher and Local 236 violated the agreement by failing to follow the grievance process prior to or during the adjudication of the NLRB complaint.

Grievant's Requested Remedy

On the issue of the remedy, the practical impact of Mosher's action of avoiding the grievance process was to cause Gross Electric to absorb the cost of either settling or defending an NLRB complaint, which could or may have been settled within the terms of the Inside Agreement. With the goal of making the grievant whole, Gross believes that he is entitled to reimbursement of the $31,000 in legal costs incurred as a result of the failure of Mosher as President of the Local to abide by the terms of the agreement.

for the Respondent.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

IRA SANDRON, Administrative Law Judge. This case is before me on a January 11, 2017 complaint and notice of hearing (the complaint) stemming from an unfair labor practice charge that International Brotherhood of Electric Workers, Local 236 (the Union or the Local) filed on November 4, 2016,<sup>1</sup> against Gross Electric, Inc. (the Respondent or the Company).

I conducted a trial in Albany, New York, on March 28 and 29, 2017, at which I afforded the parties full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence.

Issue

Did Joseph Gross, the Respondent's president and owner, refuse to hire Union President John Mosher as a journeyman electrician on the Lafarge project (Lafarge) on and after October 20, because Mosher engaged in union activity at a grievance hearing held on September 27, more specifically making statements concerning the Respondent's hiring practices and General Foreman Robert Warrings at Lafarge?<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The General Counsel does not allege that Mosher engaged in protected concerted activity separate and distinct from his conduct as union president. In any event, nothing in the record shows that any employees ever sought to have Mosher act on their behalves in any capacity other than in his role as a union official. Accordingly, I need not address the arguments in the Respondent's brief disputing that Mosher engaged in 8(a)(1) protected concerted activity.

Witnesses and Credibility

5 The General Counsel called Mosher; Mark Lajeunesse, union business manager and financial secretary, who attended the grievance hearing; Michael Martell, union recording secretary and union steward at Lafarge; and Gross as an adverse witness under Section 611(c).

10 The Respondent examined Gross after his Section 611(c) testimony, and called two individuals who were at the grievance hearing: Stephen Chamberlain, manager of the National Electrical Contractors Association (NECA), Albany Chapter; and Kevin Haggerty, president of Flex Electric.

15 The Respondent's counsel sought to offer the testimony of Brian Hart of George Martin Electric, proffering that he would testify that at a holiday party prior to September 27, Mosher got into an altercation with other Local members. I rejected that testimony on several grounds: (1) Gross' testimony that his knowledge of such played little role in his decision to deny Mosher employment; (2) the lack of a logical nexus between what might have taken place at a holiday party and Mosher's conduct and statements at the September 27 grievance hearing; and (3) no suggestion by Gross that he considered Mosher violent or threatening. Indeed, Gross testified
20 that aside from the one grievance hearing, they otherwise have enjoyed an amiable relationship in their labor-management interactions.

25 Credibility resolution is not critical to deciding the issue in this case. As might be expected, the various witnesses to what occurred between Mosher and Gross at the grievance hearing had variations in recall, but the substance of their descriptions varied in detail but not in substance, and none of their versions were in direct conflict on material points.

30 I note that Gross testified that he would have been willing to hire Mosher at jobsites other than Lafarge had Mosher applied for them (which he did not). In this regard, Martel testified without contradiction that on October 21, Warrings and Superintendent Jerry Jones both admitted 2(11) supervisors, told him that Mosher was on a "do not hire" list. Inasmuch as it is unclear whether this referred only to Lafarge or to all of the Respondent's jobs, I do not find this testimony necessarily inconsistent with Gross', and whether Gross would have rejected Mosher for other jobs remains conjectural. Either way, the issue remains the legitimacy of Gross'
35 motivation for not hiring Mosher for Lafarge.

40 There was conflicting testimony regarding if and when the Respondent announced a change in the way employees could obtain the training that the Mine Safety and Health Administration required for electricians to work on the Lafarge jobsite. However, resolving this disagreement is unnecessary inasmuch as the Respondent does not contend that Mosher lacked the requisite qualifications when he applied for work at the project starting on October 20, and thereafter.

Facts

5 Based on the entire record, including testimony and my observations of witness demeanor, documents, written and oral stipulations, and the thoughtful posttrial briefs that the General Counsel and the Respondent filed, I find the following.

10 The Respondent at all times material has been a corporation with an office and place of business in Queensbury, New York, conducting business as an electrical contractor in the construction industry and engaged in commercial and industrial construction. The Respondent does not contest jurisdiction as alleged in Paragraph 2 of the complaint, and I therefore find statutory jurisdiction.

15 Joseph Gross has been the president and sole owner of the Company since it began operations in 1994. Since before then, he has been a member of the Local.

The Respondent is signatory to the collective-bargaining agreement between the Albany Chapter of the National Electrical Contractors Association (NECA) and the Union, effective June 1, 2015, until May 31, 2018. (GC Exh. 3.) Relevant provisions follow.

20 The agreement contains an exclusive hiring hall provision (art. IV sec. 4.02) and, by its terms, gives an employer unfettered discretion in determining whom to hire: (1) Article II section 2.03 (management rights) provides, inter alia, that the employer shall have no restrictions on hiring employees; and (2) Article IV section 4.03 states, “The Employer shall have the right to reject any applicant for employment.”

25 The grievance procedure is set out in article I. The first step is attempted adjustment by one representative of each party. If they are unable to adjust a grievance within 48 hours, it is automatically referred to a labor-management committee consisting of three employer representatives and three union representatives. The committee decides grievances by majority vote.

30 Both Gross and John Mosher, Local president since July 2015, are trustees for a contractual trust funds committee (concerning pensions, health and welfare, and annuities) and also serve on the contractual labor management cooperation committee (LMCC).

35 Operation of the Referral System

40 When an employer such as the Respondent needs electricians, it places a manpower request through the Union’s referral agent. Members looking for work hear a tape recording of jobs being offered and then apply by phone. The Union maintains a daily report or log of members who applied and were referred for work. See General Counsel Exhibit 17, the reports from October 20 to November 4. Members are ranked in numerical order, with those with the lowest number on top and referred out first. The Union then provides the referrals to an employer, who can accept or reject them. The employer is required to put in writing its rejections or “spins” of applicants. See General Counsel Exhibit 18, all of the Respondent’s rejections for Lafarge from October 20 to November 4.

Members are not required to apply for an announced job. However, if they do not, and members below them on the list do and get hired, they get a “ding” or a “strike.” This applies if a member who has been rejected for a job does not continue to apply for further postings of the same job; the Union tells members to continue to apply because employers sometimes change their minds and hire applicants they previously rejected. An applicant who applies for a job, receives an offer, and then turns it down also is given a ding. Three dings results in being removed from the list and having to come back in and re-sign up. Applicants who are rejected do not receive dings. Mosher has never received any dings.

The September 27 Grievance Hearing

Jimmy Miller, an inside journeyman wireman, had given up another job, out of the area, to apply for Lafarge. However, the Respondent exercised its right under section 4.03 not to hire him, and Miller filed a grievance alleging that his nonselection was a violation of the “basic principles” (harmonious relations) section of the agreement (GC Exh. 3 at 3). (GC Exhs. 4, 5.)

On the morning of September 27, the labor-management committee met at NECA headquarters in Albany to hear two grievances, the second of which was Miller’s against the Respondent. The Union’s committee persons included President John Mosher, Business Manager Mark Lajeunesse, and Assistant Business Manager Michael Torres, who took notes. Kevin Haggerty of Flex Electric was one of the three employer representatives. Also in attendance were Stephen Chamberlain, NECA Albany Chapter manager, and a union representative.

Miller, represented by Union Assistant Business Manager Paul Fitzmourice, presented his case to the committee first. He asked why, never having worked for the Respondent, he would not be given an opportunity to prove himself. I credit Chamberlain’s uncontroverted and plausible testimony that Miller got very emotional. Torres’ notes of the meeting (GC Exh. 16 at 2) reflect that Fitzmourice stated that there was no violation of section 4.03, which gave the contractor the right to refuse an applicant.

After Miller and Fitzmourice left, Gross came into the room. He first distributed a spreadsheet listing applicants that the Respondent had rejected by project and date. (GC Exh. 8.) When Gross was asked why he had rejected or “spun” so many applicants, he responded that he generally left the selection or rejection of applicants to his job foremen (at Lafarge, they included General Foreman Robert Warrings), who were more familiar with their needs and the qualifications of applicants. Gross cited both section 4.03 and the management rights clause as giving him the right to reject an applicant for any reason.

Mosher questioned the fairness of Gross not giving a chance to applicants who had never previously worked for him. Gross responded that he did not need a reason under section 4.03. Mosher repeated what he had said. They went back and forth.

Someone other than Gross or Mosher brought up Warrings’ name. Thereafter, Mosher made disparaging comments about Warrings and his management style (which he had observed at a different jobsite), and directly or implicitly criticized Gross for employing Warrings as general foreman. Thus, both Gross and Mosher testified that Mosher stated that Warrings bullied employees, and, Mosher also said that he did not like Warrings.<sup>3</sup> Gross did not specifically respond.

The exchange between Mosher and Gross was animated, perhaps to the level of heated, but devoid of any threatening behavior, and Mosher’s tone was elevated but not out of the ordinary for a grievance hearing.<sup>4</sup> I therefore do not credit Gross to the extent that I believe he exaggerated Mosher’s level of emotion during their exchange and relied on that as a reason for later not hiring him.

10

After Gross had left, the committee unanimously decided that the Respondent’s rejection of Miller did not violate the agreement and that the grievance therefore lacked merit. See General Counsel Exhibit 7. There is no evidence that grievances have ever been filed against Warrings for bullying or otherwise engaging in improper behavior toward union members on any jobsites.

Mosher’s Referrals to Lafarge

The Lafarge project, a large scale expansion and retrofit of an existing cement plant in Ravena, New York, was by far the Respondent’s biggest job at all times relevant; and for the period from October 20 to November 7, by far the largest number of union referrals for journeymen jobs were for the Respondent’s work there. See General Counsel Exhibit 17, the Union’s day book report covering that time frame.

The Respondent has a contract of about $30 million for electrical work at Lafarge, where it started work in approximately March or April. The Respondent currently employs on the site about 120–130 electricians who are engaged on providing additional add-ons that the client has requested. Jones is the superintendent or project manager, Warrings is lead general foreman, and Joe Greene is another general foreman. Jones and Warrings are union members and obtained their employment at the project through the Union’s referral system, and presumably the same holds true of Greene. Under the general foremen are foremen who directly supervise the journeymen.<sup>5</sup> The Company has different supervisors on other jobs.

30

Through the contractual hiring hall procedures previously described, Mosher applied to work at Lafarge on October 20, 21, 24, 27, 28, and 31, and November 3 and 4, and was rejected each time. See General Counsel Exhibit 10, which also shows that other applicants were rejected multiple times. For the period from August 3, 2016, through March 8, 2017, Mosher did not otherwise apply for Lafarge or to work on four small jobs for which the Respondent requested journeymen. See General Counsel Exhibit 11.

<sup>3</sup> Credited testimony of Chamberlain, Gross, and Haggerty. Chamberlain also recalled that Mosher called Warrings “an asshole.” Tr. 297.

5 General Counsel's Exhibits 12 and 13 consist of a series of October 20 internal management emails concerning the nine journeymen, including Mosher, whom the Union referred for Lafarge that day. In the first email, sent to various management representatives, Assistant Controller Joey Vogt rejected four of them (not including Mosher) and requested input on the others.

10 He received responses from Jones and Field Supervisor Brian Pronto. Jones stated that feedback was needed on Mosher ("he may be president of the local") and (first name unclear) Joseph ("a[sic] organizer."). Pronto stated, "Joe may be rejecting [Mosher], stand by I can't get a straight answer."

In another email, Jones rejected one of the five remaining journeymen. The final email was from Gross, agreeing to three of the applicants (including Joseph) but rejecting Mosher.

15 Michael Martell, a journeyman electrician employed by the Respondent at Lafarge, and union steward there, testified without controversion about jobsite conversations that he had with Jones and Warrings on October 21.

20 Inasmuch as both Jones and Warrings are admitted agents of the Respondent, I reject the Respondent's contention that Martell's testimony concerning their statements to him was uncorroborated hearsay and "must be disregarded and discredited." (R. Br. at 25.) Rather, Federal Rules of Evidence, Rule 801(d)(2)(D) provides that a statement by a party's agent concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship, is not hearsay if offered against a party as an admission by a party-opponent. See U.S. Ecology Corp., 331 NLRB 223, 225 (2000), enfd. 26 Fed. Appx. 435 (6th Cir. 2001). Therein, the judge credited a union vice president's testimony about what a company negotiator said to him regarding statements that the negotiator had heard from other members of the employer's negotiating team. On that basis, the judge found bad-faith bargaining. The Board, citing Section 801(d)(2)(D), rejected the respondent's argument that the statements constituted inadmissible double hearsay, and upheld the judge's determinations. See also Times Union, Capital Newspapers Division, 356 NLRB 1339, 1339 fn. 1 (2011); United Rubber Workers, Local 878 (Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.), 255 NLRB 251, 251 fn. 1 (1981).

35 Furthermore, an administrative law judge has the discretion to draw an adverse inference based on a party's failure to call a witness who may reasonably assumed to be favorably disposed to the party and who could reasonably be expected to corroborate its version of events, particularly when the witness is the party's agent and thus within its authority or control. Roosevelt Memorial Medical Center, 348 NLRB 1016, 1022 (2006); see also Martin Luther King, Sr., Nursing Center, 231 NLRB 15, 15 fn. 1 (1977); Underwriters Laboratories Inc. v. NLRB, 147 F.3d 1048, 1054 (9th Cir. 1998). In that circumstance, drawing an adverse inference regarding any factual question on which the witness is likely to have knowledge is appropriate. International Automated Machines, 285 NLRB 1122, 1123 (1987), enfd. mem. 861 F.2d 720 (6th Cir. 1988).

Finally, Martell's testimony about his conversation with Jones was corroborated in relevant part by the tape recording that he made as they spoke. (GC Exhs. 20(a) (the tape recording), 20(b) (a transcript thereof).)

5 Accordingly, I credit Martell's un rebutted versions of those conversations and find the following.

10 On the morning of October 21, Martell approached Warrings at or near the main office trailer. Martell expressed concern about members being turned down for work at Lafarge, including those who had not previously worked for the Company. Warrings stated that the Respondent had a "do not hire list" of people who for one reason or another would not be accepted. Martell stated that he knew that Mosher had been refused work, to which Warrings replied:<sup>6</sup>

15 John had gone around bad mouthing Joe Gross and his company and Bob Warrings[sic], and that if John thought that he was going to go around and speak negatively of the Company and of Bob, and then think he was going to work for him, that it wasn't going to happen.

20 Warrings then spoke briefly about employees who had been on the do not hire list but then taken off of it.

25 Later that morning, Martell approached Jones outside the field foreman's office. He expressed the same concern that he had voiced to Warrings and cited Mosher as an example of someone being turned down if he had not before worked for the Respondent. Jones also responded that the Company had a do not hire list, stating that Mosher "had burned his bridge with Gross Electric due to his actions at a previously interaction with Joe Gross"<sup>7</sup> and that if Mosher wanted to pursue any other action, he would have to speak directly to Gross.

30 At a LMCC meeting in approximately November, Gross asked to meet separately with Lajuennesse and Mosher about settling the NLRB matter. During the course of their conversation, Gross stated that he had rejected Mosher because of what Mosher had said about Warring and his management style, and Gross' desire to avoid a hostile worksite situation.

35 Gross testified that he alone made the decision to reject Mosher for work as a journeyman electrician at Lafarge, "based on his negative comments" at the September 27 hearing, "and the nature of his emotional state saying it."<sup>8</sup> The Respondent does not dispute that Mosher was qualified to perform the work.<sup>9</sup>

40 In the past, Gross has hired other union officers and executive board members.<sup>10</sup>

Analysis and Conclusions

Initially, I will address the impact of Sec. 4.03 of the collective-bargaining agreement, which the Respondent's amended answer raised as an affirmative defense to its rejection of Mosher. The General Counsel's brief (at 20-21) correctly states the law on the matter. Thus, the unfettered right of the Respondent to refuse referrals under Sec. 4.03 does not serve to insulate the Respondent from liability it might have for engaging in unlawful discrimination under the Act. As the Supreme Court said in J.I. Case Co. v. NLRB, 321 U.S. 332, 337 (1944), "The Board asserts a public right vested in it as a public body, charged in the public interest with the duty of preventing unfair labor practices.' . . . Wherever private contracts conflict with its functions, they obviously must yield or the Act would be reduced to a futility." See also NLRB v. Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., 304 U.S. 333, 347-348 (1938).

In determining whether a refusal to hire is unlawful, the governing test is set out in FES, 331 NLRB 9 (2000), supplemented 333 NLRB 66 (2001), enfd. 301 F.3d 83 (3rd Cir. 2002). Initially, the General Counsel must show the following to establish a prima facie case: (1) the respondent was hiring, or had concrete plans to hire, at the time of the alleged unlawful conduct; (2) the applicant had experience or training relevant to the announced or generally known requirements of the positions for hire, or in the alternative, that the employer has not adhered uniformly to such requirements, or that the requirements were themselves pretextual or were applied as a pretext for discrimination; and (3) antiunion animus contributed to the decision not to hire the applicant.

Once the General Counsel has met that burden, the burden shifts to the respondent to show that it would not have considered or hired, respectively, the applicant even in the absence of his or her union activity or affiliation.

As to elements one and two above, there is no dispute that the Respondent was hiring at the times that Mosher applied to work as a journeyman electrician at Lafarge, or that he was qualified to perform such work.

The issue is whether the General Counsel has met element three, showing that Gross' decision not to hire Mosher was based on antiunion animus.

It is well established that disruptive and disrespectful conduct of applicants during the application process can lead to the conclusion that the employer would not have hired them regardless of their union activity. Exterior Systems, Inc., 338 NLRB 677, 678 (2002), citing Heiliger Electric Corp., 325 NLRB 966, 966 fn. 3 and 968 (1998) ("[T]here is no provision in the Act or in the law developed by the Board that would require an employer to . . . [be] subjected to rude or intimidating conduct."). See also J & R Roofing Co., 350 NLRB 694 (2007), in which the Board found that the respondent met its rebuttal of showing that it would not have hired the applicants regardless of their union activities, because of their lewd and sexually offensive comments.

Here, Mosher's conduct at the September 27 grievance hearing was not in conjunction with his application for employment, and it certainly did not rise to the level of disruptive or offensively disrespectful. The question, though, is whether or not, his criticisms of the Company's policies, Warrings' conduct as a manager, and Gross (directly or indirectly) can be considered as related to his position as union president.

There is no evidence that any grievances have ever been filed against Warrings for bullying or other inappropriate conduct, either at Lafarge, any other jobs of the Respondent, or any other jobs of other contractors. Additionally, there is no evidence that the Union has ever filed grievances against, or otherwise objected to the Respondent's policies rejecting applicants under Section 4.03 of the contract, either because they had not previously worked for the Company, or otherwise. Indeed, all of the union members of the labor-management committee (including Mosher) agreed with the employer representatives that Miller's challenge of rejection on that basis had no merit under the agreement, and Fitzmourice even stated that the Respondent could refuse Miller under section 4.03. Accordingly, by arguing to the contrary, Mosher was taking a position at odds with the Union.

Other significant factors include the following:

- (1) The Respondent has rejected numerous other applicants and at a higher rate than other contractors that are signatory to the agreement.
- (2) Gross is a union contractor and himself a member of the Local, as are his managers at Lafarge.
- (3) In the past, Gross has hired Local officers and board members.
- (4) The record is devoid of any evidence that Gross has expressed animus toward the Union or committed other unfair labor practices.

The General Counsel (Br. at 19) cites Yesterday's Children, Inc., 321 NLRB 766, 767 (1996), vacated in relevant part 115 F.3d 36 (1st Cir. 1997), and other cases, for the proposition that employees engaged in Section 7 activity in protest of actions by their employer do not lose the Act's protection simply because they mention that they dislike a manager and would like to see the manager discharged. Those cases are distinguishable. Here, Mosher was not engaged in any protected concerted activity as an employee per se; rather, his conduct was solely in connection with his role as a union official. As noted above, his statements about the Respondent's hiring policies did not mesh with the Union's position, and Warrings' "bullying" conduct has never been the subject of grievances or any protests by the Union. Finally, Mosher's statements about Warrings' "bullying" were generalized criticisms of his management style, not tied to any specific actions that might violate the collective-bargaining agreement.

Return to Link

In all of these circumstances, I conclude that Gross refused to hire Mosher for Lafarge because he took offense at Mosher's criticisms of him, his policies under the contract that the Union has not contested, and Warrings, and not because of antiunion animus.

Accordingly, I conclude that the General Counsel has failed to establish a prima facie case of unlawful failure to hire. Assuming arguendo a prima facie case, I conclude that the Respondent would not have hired Mosher even aside from any union considerations because of Gross' displeasure over Mosher's statements at the September 27 hearing that were not sufficiently within the purview of his role as Local president to constitute activity on behalf of the Union.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. The Respondent has not engaged in any unfair labor practices under the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended<sup>11</sup>

ORDER

The complaint is dismissed.
